Says Israeli Choice Not Welcome To Soviet

Presumably because of his Zionist background in Czarist Russia, the Soviet Union has rejected the nomination of Zalman Shazar as Israeli Minister to Moscow.

Because it is trying not to exacerbate the present tenseness in Soviet-Israeli relations, the Foreign Office of Israel has refused to discuss the case. However, it is known that Mr. Shazar's name was submitted to Moscow some time ago, and that now an agreement is being sought, instead, for the appointment of Dr. Shmuel Elyashiv, Israeli minister to Prague and former head of the Foreign Office's Eastern European Department, says the New York Times.

Private Israelis do not hesitate to fit the Russian action on Mr. Shazar's nomination into the anti-Zionist, anti-Israeli pattern that has emerged from the Soviet Union since the end of 1948. It fits also with the stories recently brought to Israel by the few Russians who have managed to reach Israel of concerted action to suppress Jewish teaching and Jewish communal life.

These stories inevitably have reminded Israelis of how the Talmudic scholars and rabbis kept their religion alive after Titus had destroyed their temple in 70 A. D. and forbade the teaching of the law. As in those times, according to these Russian immigrants, the teaching goes on — underground.

The Russians gave no reason for their rejection of Mr. Shazar. In their present mood of bitter anti-Zionism, it is believed that they want someone less intimately connected with the movement in Russia and less likely to sustain the emotions about Israel that the Soviet authorities are attempting to suppress.

According to information in [illegible] diplomatic circles since the ovation accorded Mrs. Golda Myerson, Israel's first Minister to Russia, when she attended Jewish New Year's services in a Moscow synagogue two years ago.

Mr. Shazar, 61 years old, is better known to Russian Jewry than Mrs. Myerson. He came to Palestine in 1924. As Zalman Rubashoff, he helped found the Zionist students' movement in Russia, an organization that the Communists since have branded as anti-Soviet.

He has been one of the leading members of the Mapai Socialist party and was Minister of Education until the last Government reshuffle. When he left the Government last October, Premier David Ben-Gurion told Parliament that Mr. Shazar soon would undertake a mission of vital importance to world Jewry. It is believed that this may have made the Russians suspicious of Mr. Shazar's intentions in Russia.

Under normal circumstances, Israel probably would not have made a second nomination so quickly and with such little fuss. But of prime consideration to the country is the fact that about 3,000,000 Jews still remain in Eastern Europe, and it is hoped to "rescue the million or so in Communist countries outside Russia."

Sees Security Of Jews Linked With Rights For All

Jacob Blaustein, president of the American Jewish Committee, asserted that the upbuilding of American military strength for national security was not sufficient. He called for close cooperation among all religious, ethnic and racial groups to eliminate prejudice and discrimination to stop the onslaught of Communism.

Addressing 500 Jewish leaders at the forty-third annual conference of the Committee at the Commodore Hotel, in New York, Mr. Blaustein, a Baltimore industrialist, declared that "it is absolutely vital that America be a unity."

"No nation split within itself by the hostility of group against group, or weakened by prejudices and discriminations, can hope to be strong in the face of the enemy," he added. "Our fate — without regard to the creed, color or ethnic origin of the particular group — will be a common one. We shall survive together or go down together.

"That is why we and all other American institutions must mobilize all our resources for the achievement of that American unity and promoting human relations programs directed to bridging the gap between the American promise and the American reality, to buttressing the true foundations of American strength, so that — united and equal among ourselves — we can face the future together in the calm confidence that human decency will eventually triumph in a world overshadowed by the threats of brutishness and tyranny."

Declaiming that the Committee had been devoted to the continuous extension of rights and liberties of all groups in America, Mr. Blaustein asserted that the security of Jews and all other groups "was [illegible] Times.

"Where democracy fails," he said, "or illiberalism becomes rampant or hysteria develops, Jews as well as others must necessarily suffer; particularly is this true in an atmosphere of tension such as now exists."

Assistant Secretary of Labor Philip M. Kaiser asserted that if the United States were to fulfill its responsibility in world leadership it must hew to human rights as the "highest and indeed the ultimate justification of its public policy in both the domestic and international spheres."

Asserting that the nation's security is contingent upon winning converts throughout the world to our side, Dr. Isidor Lubin, American representative to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, declared that "Americans and Western Europeans sometimes seem to forget that freedom doesn't stop with the rights of free speech and free press, the right of a fair and speedy trial, the right to take part in one's own government and so forth."

Dr. Lubin stressed that "equally, though not more important, to the billion human beings trapped in a mire of poverty, ignorance, disease and too often colonial overlordship, is the freedom from want and misery." He said that

N. Y. Doctor Pioneered In Allergy Work

Dr. Matthew Brunner, fifty-five, one of Brooklyn's first allergists and president of the New York Allergy Society, died at Jewish Hospital of Brooklyn, N. Y. He lived at 921 Washington Avenue, Brooklyn. Dr. Brunner was graduated from New York University Medical School in 1918, just as the study of allergies was becoming established as a specialty of medical science. After interning at Jewish Hospital, he helped, with his colleague, Dr. Matthew Walzer, to found the allergy clinic at that hospital. At the time of his death he was attending in allergy at Jewish Hospital and the Hospital for Chronic Diseases, in Brooklyn.

He was known nationally for his work on allergies due to intestinal parasites and on the absorption of food allergens through the intestinal tract. He was a fellow of the American Academy of Allergy and author of a number of technical papers.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Lea Brunner; his mother, Mrs. Ida Brunner; a son, Norman G. Brunner; a daughter, Miss Jacqueline N. Brunner, and a brother, Leonard Brunner.

Was Expert On Vitamins For Infants

Dr. Jacques Melvin Lewis, Professor of Pediatrics at New York University College of Medicine and president of the Medical board at Beth Israel Hospital, in New York, died at Miami Beach, Florida. His age was 56. He had an [illegible] Eighty-sixth Street.

In his research Dr. Lewis had been a student of fat-soluble vitamins. He collaborated for many years with the late Dr. Alfred F. Hess in studies on the prevention of rickets and the absorption of Vitamin D. He assisted Dr. Hess in his discovery that the bone-building Vitamin D could be developed in foods by exposure to ultra-violet rays. This discovery, made at about the same time by other scientists, led to the prevention and cure of rickets by irradiated foods, particularly milk, and by viosterol.

For the last ten years Dr. Lewis had been engaged in studies of Vitamin A in animals and infants. At his death he was engaged in studies of Vitamin A and fat absorption in premature infants.

Last year he was one of a group of pediatricians from the New York University-Bellevue Medical Center who announced new methods for treating babies who had difficulty in absorbing fat. The report described studies carried out for two years at Bellevue Hospital and said that measures had been taken to improve fat absorption rather than the usual avoidance of fat.

Since 1946, Dr. Lewis had been one of a group at Beth Israel Hospital who had been comparing the absorption of Vitamin A in water and oily preparations and had found that better results came from the aqueous preparations.

Born in New York, Dr. Lewis attended City College and received an M. D. degree in 1923 from New York University. After that he did post-graduate work in Germany and Vienna. He served as assistant resident obstetrician at Manhattan Maternity Hospital, an interne at Mount Sinai Hospital, and resident pediatrician at the Home for Hebrew Infants. He also had been assistant visiting pediatrician at City Hospital.

At his death he was a visiting physician at Bellevue and an attending physician at Beth Israel. He had been on the faculty of the New York University College of Medicine since 1931, when he began as an instructor. He became a full professor last year.

Dr. Lewis was a fellow of the American Pediatric Society, American Academy of Pediatrics, Harvey Society and the New York Academy of Medicine. He was a member of the American Medical Association and the New York State and County Medical Societies.

Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Grace Mitchell Lewis; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Lewis of New York; two sons, William S. and Alfred J. Lewis, of New York; a brother, Sidney Lewis, of New York; and a sister, Mrs. Josephine Usiskin of Lawrence, L. I.

TO COMPLETE TRANSFER OF IRAQI JEWS IN MAY

Israel will raise her immigration quota from 15,000 to 20,000 monthly to complete the transfer of Iraqi Jews to Israel by the end of May. The coordination committee of the Israeli Government and the Jewish Agency for Palestine estimated that 54,000 Jews were awaiting transportation from Iraq under "operation Ali Baba" and fixed their monthly quota at 18,500. Hitherto immigration from Baghdad had averaged 5,000 monthly.

It is understood that the increased quota from Iraq will not be at the expense of Jews from East Europe who will continue to come at the rate of 5,000 monthly, according to the New York Times. Therefore, it appears immigration from North Africa will be virtually suspended until "Operation Ali Baba" is completed.

W.J.C. Protests Hint Of British Mercy For Nazis

Sir Ivone Kirkpatrick, British High Commissioner for Germany, was severely reprimanded in the British House of Commons for a recent statement to the press that he was willing to review the prison terms of Nazi war criminals.

Barnett Janner, a Labor M.P., said the High Commissioner's statement "filled a large number of people with horror" in view of the mass murder committed by [illegible] proper trial. He demanded that the government explain whether Sir Ivone made his statement with the approval of the Foreign Secretary (to whom the High Commissioner is responsible).

In the absence of Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin, it was Ernest Davies, Foreign Under Secretary, who replied that the High Commissioner's statement was not an official but a personal one. He said all sentences were being reviewed, and assured his questioner that this did not necessarily imply revision or reduction of the sentences.

Soon after Sir Ivone made his statement at a press luncheon in Berlin, the World Jewish Congress protested to representatives of the Big Four powers in London.

New Projects In Israel Hold Hope For Economy

In spite of the threat of a new world war, the difficult economic condition in Israel and the latest tensions between labor and management, the Israeli government is undertaking a number of new projects which will help to strengthen Israeli's economy and to increase the living standard of its people, reports the New York Herald Tribune.

Recently, an American-financed and American-managed shoe factory started work in Jerusalem and hopes to export 90 per cent of its output to the United States. During the next months automobiles of an Israeli factory will appear on the market.

A commission of experts is studying the exploitation of phosphate and other chemicals in the Negev. Irrigation projects will be completed during the next two years in order to produce more fodder for poultry. An agreement between the government and the potash company will result in the construction of a road from the Dead Sea to Beer-Sheva in order to facilitate transportation to the harbors.

According to Eliezar Kaplan, Israeli Minister of Finance, the Israeli government intends to continue its policy of encouraging private enterprise and foreign investors. The last months have created difficulties for Israel's export trade since the country has to import raw materials and new machinery. Prices for both in-

Warburg Extra Gift Of $500,000 To U.J.A. Is For Immigrants To Israel

The United Jewish Appeal announced the receipt of a special gift of $500,000 from Mrs. Felix M. Warburg, New York philanthropist, which has been made in addition to Mrs. Warburg's regular annual contribution of $150,000. The special gift, Mrs. Warburg explained in a letter to the U.J.A., was made to mark her seventy-fifth birthday and also the eightieth birthday of the late Mr. Warburg, which fell on January 14. Mr. Warburg was a senior partner of the investment banking firm of Kuhn Loeb & Company.

Mrs. Warburg wrote to the U.J.A., currently conducting a campaign for more than $203,000,000, that it was her wish that the special gift be used for new immigrants in Israel, particularly for housing and educational facilities. Her letter emphasized the importance of getting immigrants in Israel "out of the camps and integrated into the life of Israel as quickly as possible."

The gift, Mrs. Warburg added, could serve as "practical help" to a people who are making "a real contribution to democracy in these critical times."

In commenting on Mrs. Warburg's gift, William Rosenwald, Rudolf G. Sonneborn and Rabbi Jonah B. Wise, the national chairmen of the U.J.A. campaign, issued a joint statement which praised the "selfless generosity" of the donor.

The gift, the statement said, would not only strengthen "the free way of life in a new country," but also inspire men and women throughout the country to follow Mrs. Warburg's example in helping the U.J.A. meet "pressing human needs both in Israel and other parts of the world."

Mrs. Warburg said she and her [illegible] but was rather inspired "political Zionists." During these visits Mrs. Warburg said she and her husband were so deeply impressed by the "cultural needs of the Jewish settlers that we gave considerable sums toward that end and toward the strengthening of the newly founded Hebrew University under the far-seeing idealistic leadership of our dear friend, Judah L. Magnes, who was our guide on our first trip to that country."

In memory of the late Dr. Judah L. Magnes, a life-long friend of the Warburgs, Mrs. Warburg established the Judah L. Magnes Fund for the post-graduate training of physicians resident in Israel, says the New York Times. She has been identified with various phases of Hadassah work, serving as honorary chairman of the building fund campaign of the Rothschild-Hadassah University Hospital.

Born in New York City, Mrs. Warburg is the daughter of the late Jacob H. Schiff, a founder of Kuhn Loeb & Co., and a noted philanthropist.

With her late husband, she has shared an active interest in the American Arbitration Association, the New York City Board of Education, Teacher's College, the Horace Mann and Lincoln Schools, Harvard University, the American Museum of Natural History, the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the Julliard School of Music.

On the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of her husband's arrival in America, Mrs. Warburg created the Felix M. Warburg Memorial Awards at New York University for the furtherance of improved human relations in this country. She established a $500,000 fund in 1924 for the support of the Visiting Nurse Service of New [illegible] She also has [illegible]

Gets Legion Of Honor Award For "Tide Of Toys"

Irving Geist, business man and philanthropist, received the Cross of a Chevalier of the French Legion of Honor from Roger Seydoux, French Consul-General, at the Cultural Division of the French Embassy, 934 Fifth Avenue, in New York.

Mr. Seydoux cited the work of Mr. Geist in the American Legion's Tide of Toys, which sent 3,000,000 toys to European children last year and has a goal of 10,000,000 toys this year, in the campaign which ends this month. Mr. Geist has also aided several French veterans' organizations and contributed to rehabilitation programs in France as well as in the U. S.

At the reception, Mr. Geist told reporters that he planned to distribute $25,000, returned to him by veterans to whom he lent the money over a five-year period, among several organizations and institutions.

The recipients will include: the rehabilitation center at New York University-Bellevue Medical Center, the Four Chaplains Memorial Fund, St. Albans Naval Hospital, the Bronx Veterans Hospital, Northport Veterans Hospital, the Marine Corps League, the Four Chaplains Memorial Fund of France, the American Legion, the veterans' hospital under construction at First Avenue between Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Streets, the Eastern Paralyzed Veterans Association, the Disabled American Veterans, the Jewish War Veterans and the Catholic War Veterans.

"Proverbs With Commentary" Is A New Book

The use of pithy, balanced, well-turned sentences to express universal truths and judgments must have been the indoor sport of wise men ever since men learned to express their thoughts in words. The Bible is full of such maxims; and, in view of the reputation for wisdom attributed to King Solomon, it is but reasonable that the ancient biblical book which bears the name of Proverbs should have been attributed to him. There seems, in fact, little reason to doubt that he was responsible for a considerable number of these wise sayings. To what extent he borrowed from his predecessors and to what extent proverbs were imitated by others is less important than the fact that many of the sayings contained in this biblical book have passed into the thought and speech of the Western world.

Everyone knows that a lazy man should take to heart the example of the industrious ant, or that life and death are in the power of the tongue. Few, however, know that these were among the statements of the wisest of kings and are contained in that well-advertised but little-known anthology of Jewish writings called the Bible.

This alone would justify the publication of the new work, "Proverbs With Commentary", by the well-known Jewish scholar, Dr. Julius H. Greenstone. The small book of Proverbs alone may attract a reader when the ponderous Bible as a whole may not. The modern Jew will hardly know where to locate Proverbs in the entire Bible, let alone be attracted to read the closely-printed page. The book under review is of the usual size; the fourth in the series of Bible commentaries published by The Jewish Publication Society; the biblical text in English is in large, well-spaced type, so that its reading should prove effortless. Dr. Greenstone, however, did considerably more than reprint the text. He added a commentary.

Now the word commentary is among those that have an ominous sound for the modern reader. It [illegible] dry, dull and scholastic. Yet the most famous commentary to the Bible in Jewish tradition, that of Rashi, is anything but that. And Dr. Greenstone has quite obviously modeled himself upon Rashi rather than most of his verbose, humorless successors. Much of the material in the Book of Proverbs presents difficulties which make this commentary essential. Hebrew in general is a compact language, and maxims require even greater terseness. Besides, the social conditions presupposed in many of the maxims are vastly different from ours. Dr. Greenstone's comments are brief, clear and to the point. With them before him, the reader should find the individual proverbs interesting to the point of being delightful. An introduction to the book describes the structure and probable development of the book as well as its influence throughout the ages.

Dr. Greenstone is one of the foremost Jewish scholars in the United States. He was for many years instructor in Religion and Talmud at Gratz College, of which institution he was the principal from 1934 to 1945. Among his numerous scholarly works is a commentary on the Book of Numbers which he prepared for The Jewish Publication Society (1939).

Mrs. Gladys K. Stern, national director of the Brandeis University Associates, will integrate the activities of the various Brandeis University Associates groups throughout the U. S. in more than twenty communities. The associates comprise men who serve the two-year-old institution in the role of "foster alumni".

World Jewish Congress U.N. Consultant Pleads For Action On Problem Of Statelessness

Dr. Maurice L. Perlzweig, United Nations Consultant for the World Jewish Congress, made an appeal before a Committee of the United Nations Economic and Social Council for early action to lift what he described as "the burden of insecurity, inequality and fear which is borne by thousands of stateless persons in some of the most highly civilized countries in the world."

The Committee, consisting of the five Great Powers, together with Pakistan and Peru, was in session in order to consider requests for action by the Economic and Social Council which is meeting next month in Santiago de Chile. Dr. Perlzweig, speaking on behalf of the World Jewish Congress and its affiliated bodies in sixty-four countries, urged consideration of Congress proposals in connection with the Council's discussion on the Draft Covenant on Human Rights and on the problem of statelessness.

Drawing attention to the decision of the General Assembly last December to refer back the text of the Draft Covenant to the Human Rights Commission for revision, he pointed out that certain non-governmental organizations, including his own, had been an important factor in securing this important change in international policy, and that this was widely acknowledged. The Assembly had made ample provision for consultation with the Specialized Agencies and other intergovernmental bodies in this work, and the opinion of governments would of course be fully represented. But non-governmental agencies, apart from their right as consultative bodies to make submissions, would not be drawn into active and continuous consultation.

He therefore urged that under rules established by the General Assembly last December, the Economic and Social Council should summon a special conference of international non-governmental bodies active in the field of human rights in order to give them an opportunity of examining certain urgent proposals in common. The organs of the United Nations in this field had been under pressure from non-government agencies, and had shown themselves sensitive to these expresions of public opinion. But, continued Dr. Perlzweig, he understood that within several important delegations the view was held that the non-governmental agencies now had an obligation to harmonize their proposals, and he felt that a conference under official auspices would now be in a position to make a contribution of great practical value to the work of the Human Rights Commission.

"The governments and intergovernment agencies", said Dr. Perlzweig, "will be fully represented, as is natural and proper, in this vital work of preparation of an act of international legislation which will touch the daily lives of people throughout the world. But there are unfortunately millions of people whose views and aspirations will be represented by no government and no official body. It is estimated by authoritative sources that there are in the world today at least sixty million refugees, and they need the protection of an International Covenant on Human Rights more desperately than any other group of human beings. Many of them are represented by international non-governmental agencies and their voice should be heard through these agencies before final and binding decisions are taken."

Turning to the problem of statelessness, Dr. Perlzweig expressed the deep appreciation of his organization for the preparatory work in dealing with this problem which was being done by the appropriate organs of the United Nations. But he emphasized that much time must pass, possibly many years, before this difficult and complex proposal could be fully solved on a world scale. "Meantime", he added, "many thousands of people continue to suffer under the disability of a status which inflicts grievous and undeserved punishment on innocent people. I am thinking not of remote and primitive countries, but of democratic and liberal states, indeed, countries famous for their libertarian tradition, in Western Europe. I respectfully urge that the Economic and Social Council should address an appeal to these countries to lift, by appropriate legislative and administrative measures, the burden of insecurity, inequality, and fear which is borne by so many of their stateless inhabitants."

"The United States, the United Kingdom, Australia, Canada and other countries have for many years made naturalization available to resident aliens of good character who are prepared to discharge their civic obligations under conditions which experience has shown both reasonable and humane. These countries have not suffered as a result. On the contrary, they have grown great and strong because they have shown themselves ready to augment their strength by immigrants who have brought new knowledge and enterprise with them, and in countless numbers have shown themselves able and willing to serve the national cause.

"There is no reason why other countries, in other respects in the front rank of progress, should not follow a similar policy, and they

RETTER-PTACK

The wedding of Dorothy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rubin Ptack, 6156 MacDonald Avenue, to Harry Retter, youngest son of Joseph Retter, 4257 Esplanade Avenue, and the late Mrs. Retter, took place on Sunday, December 17, at six o'clock. Rabbi I. Teicher and Reverend Joshua Diin officiated. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She wore a floor-length gown of white satin. It was made with a lace yoke and a standing lace collar, long lace sleeves coming to points at the wrists, tight-fitted bodice, and a satin skirt with a net insert in the front, and the back was trimmed with rhinestones, ending in a long net train. Her tulle illusion veil was held in place by a heart-shaped headdress, trimmed with rosettes and rhinestones, and she carried a white Bible covered with two white orchids, and streamers. Mrs. S. Ehrlick, sister of the bride, as matron of honour, wore a floor-length gown of aquamarine-blue nylon net trimmed with black Chantilly lace; also a heart-shaped gold braided headdress, and carried a cascade of Talisman roses. The bridesmaids were: Mrs. C. Retter, sister-in-law of the groom, in green lace; Mrs. M. Thuna, in light green marquisette; Miss Ruth Wise, in navy-blue over white net; and Miss Helen Kenigsberg, in blue net over taffeta; all with poke bonnets, and nosegays of mixed flowers. Carole Ptack, sister of the bride, as junior bridesmaid, wore an orchid-coloured net dress over yellow taffeta, with a Dutch cap made of yellow taffeta, with orchid-coloured tulle, and carried a nosegay of mixed flowers. Jack Retter, brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were: Charles Retter, brother of the groom; Saul Ehrlick, brother-in-law of the bride; Mortimer Thuna, and B. Zidle. Martimar Ptack, cousin of the bride, was junior usher. Standards of flowers and ferns decorated the canopy, the posts being trimmed with greenery, variegated flowers, and candelabra. "Because" was sung. Following the ceremony, a dinner took place in the hall of the synagogue, at tables adorned with variegated flowers. Mrs. Ptack, mother of the bride, received in a cinnamon-coloured tissue faille floor-length gown, trimmed with bronze-coloured beading. Her hat was made of cinnamon-coloured suedine, with gold braiding and illusion tulle, and she had a yellow orchid. Mrs. J. Retter, sister-in-law of the groom, wore a plaid taffeta floor-length gown trimmed with brown velvet, a brown velvet hat, and a yellow orchid. The bride and groom spent their honeymoon in Los Angeles, Calif., the bride travelling in a navy-blue wool suit, with yellow accessories, a silver-grey muskrat jacket, and an orchid. They will reside at 4257 Esplanade Avenue. Mr. and Mrs. J. Retter, uncle and aunt of the groom, of Philadelphia, Pa.; and Miss Sarah Moss, cousin of the bride, of New York, were wedding guests.

J. N. F. Collection Box Is 50 Years Old

A small blue and white collection box, rich in Zionist tradition, which has played a major role in the building of Israel as a nation—has rounded out fifty years of service.

The box is the symbol of the Jewish National Fund, which had its three-day golden jubilee conference with 1,500 delegates representing various sections of America, held in Washington, D.C.

The fund is the land-purchasing agency of the World Zionist Organization. The collection box, as well as multiplied thousands of others, has been used, and still is, in the collection of funds for buying land in Israel.

The box has been a familiar sight in homes and stores throughout America. About $150,000,000 has been donated to the fund in fifty years, and this money has been used for the redemption of land in Israel. A large part of this money has been poured in small silver into the collection boxes.

The Jewish National Fund has been devoted to these principles:

"The acquisition of land in Palestine for newcomers; to lease the land to farmers and home builders; to drain swamps; to plant and conserve forests, to develop water resources and irrigation."

The fund's history showed that it planted the first forests on rocky soil in Palestine. It helped establish the first settlements on fund land and assisted in building the first all-Jewish city of Tel Aviv. The symbolical importance of the small collection box was emphasized by Dr. Harris J. Levine, president of the Jewish National Fund of America. He announced at the same time that his agency planned to raise $150,000,000 in the next five years for the acquisition and development of land in Israel.

"As we celebrate our golden jubilee our thoughts go out first to the countless men and women who stood at the entrance of great meetings throughout the years to solicit donations, who painstakingly distributed the blue and white national fund box to myriads of Jewish homes in all parts of the world," Dr. Levine asserted. The fund's head stressed that his agency was "primarily a people's fund."

"It has its roots deep in the masses of the people," he said. 'For years and years the fund's income has been chiefly derived from the pennies, nickels and dimes contributed by the plain people, the men in the street, the women in the kitchen, the child at school. Till this day we rely to a great extent on what we call our traditional collections, which comprise the coins dropped into the blue-and-white box."

Mendel N. Fisher, executive director of the fund, in his annual report to the delegates, asserted that American Jews had provided more than 75 per cent of the total world intake of $150,000,000 in the last fifty years for the purchase of land in Israel.

Mr. Fisher reported that the fund operated throughout the country, and added that "no Jewish institution in America received more individual popular gifts from American Jews than the Jewish National Fund." He said that there were 300,000 blue-and-white boxholders in the U. S. registered with the fund's offices in New York City.

In a message to the delegates, President Chaim Weizmann of Israel hailed the golden jubilee of the fund, asserting that "once again Zionist leaders in the United States have gathered in conference to throw their resources, intellectual, moral and financial, into Israel's cause."

"To bring water to the thirsty earth," Dr. Weizmann wrote, "shade to the sun-parched sands, the laughter of children to a countryside where only jackals howl; to unearth the good soil under the rocks, to push back the desert, and remove the last swamps — these are among the tasks of the Jewish National Fund in its second fifties."

Other messages were received from Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion, of Israel; Chief Rabbi Isaac Herzog; Joseph Sprinzak, Speaker of the Israeli Parliament; Eliezer Kaplan, Finance Minister; Moshe Sharett, Foreign Minister; Golda Myerson, Minister of Labor, and Moshe Shapiro, Minister of Immigration.

American Jewish Committee Reports On Interviews With Refugees From Russia

Soviet Jews who wish to practice their religion in strict conformance with its rules and free of secret police surveillance must do so clandestinely, according to refugees from the Soviet Union. Their account indicates that pious believers in Orthodox Judaism must carry on what is virtually an underground religion apart from the Government-watched Jewish religious institutions.

This and other information about the position of the Jewish religion in the Soviet Union is contained in a report by Mrs. Rachel Ehrlich, just released by the American Jewish Committee. The report is based on a series of interviews with Jews formerly resident in the Soviet Union who have escaped to America. The resulting picture is given partial confirmation by the independent evidence contained in letters written by Soviet Jews to the Union of Russian Jews in the U. S.

The persons interviewed declared that pious Jews in the Soviet Union regarded the few existing public synagogues there as under the control of the secret police. The government tolerated rabbis, sextons, and other officials of these houses of worship are regarded as M. V. D. agents or informers.

Moreover, these reports declare, the ordinary conditions of Soviet life are such as to make it almost impossible for pious Jews to observe their religion fully. As a result, great exertions are required to arrange clandestinely for such matters as the availability of kosher meat, religious education for the young, circumcision as a religious rite and observance of Saturday as the sabbath day of rest.

Soviet Jews, according to those interviewed, have evolved a number of techniques to circumvent both surveillance and the obstacles to observance of Orthodox Judaism, says the New York Times. Because of the difficulties involved, however, as well as because of the secular atmosphere of life in the Soviet Union, only a relatively small fraction of the Jews are probably able to live in full accord with the tenets of their faith.

Religious Jews take advantage of such liberty to practice Judaism as Soviet laws permit, utilizing public synagogues, having fowl slaughtered ritually, and having matzohs baked for the sabbath. For many religious purposes, however, they simply ignore M.V.D. sponsored rabbis and call on the services of seemingly lay co-religionists who perform such functions as circumcision or supervising kosher slaughter of animals clandestinely.

Some groups of Jews in Moscow and other cities conduct religious services in secret in small groups that meet in different homes. People with this degree of devotion to Judaism apparently try to give their children Jewish religious training at home or in clandestine Hebrew schools where youngsters have to learn everything by heart since there are no textbooks.

To keep Saturday as the sabbath under the compulsory six-day work week, religious Jews there apparently often organize handicraft cooperatives engaged in such activities as bookbinding, knitting and hand weaving. In such organizations they can arrange their working time at will and avoid labor on Saturday under the pretext that they are working at home.

Most Jews in the Soviet Union are under strong pressure to abandon the religion of their forefathers as well as the Yiddish cultural background that distinguished Jewish communities in Czarist Russia.

Great strides have apparently been made toward assimilation, the letters received by the Union of Russian Jews indicate, according to the American Jewish Committee report. Soviet Jews apparently write much more comfortably in the Russian or Ukrainian languages than in Yiddish and many of them know little or no Yiddish.

In contradiction to official claims of the Soviet Government that minority cultures have been fostered, the Soviet Jews able to write or speak freely in areas outside the Kremlin's control report that as early as 1930 the process of wiping out Yiddish schools had begun. By 1945 or 1946, there was virtually no Jewish school system in the Soviet Union and the few remaining Yiddish cultural institutions such as libraries or theatres were dying.

Despite the legal Soviet ban against anti-Semitism, the material available indicates that this is still a strong force in the Soviet population, according to the New York Times account of the A.J.C. report. Latent before World War II, it broke into the open during the conflict Soviet Jews report.

In the occupied areas, German propaganda depicted the Soviet Government's resistance to the Nazi Army as done only in the interests of the Jews. This apparently met a warm response among the peoples of the western part of the Soviet Union, many of whom cooperated with the Germans in the organized slaughter of Jews. The Soviet Government did little or nothing, these informants assert, to evacuate Jews as such before German armies took over the territory.

In the areas that remained under Soviet control during the war, anti-Jewish feeling frequently broke into the open. The Soviet population in this region was influenced by German propaganda directly or indirectly through returning servicemen affected by it. Moreover, the coming of Jews into areas where they had not been before created new tensions under the difficult conditions of wartime.

WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS

should be urged to do so by the Economic and Social Council which speaks in the name of the international community in the field of social affairs. The international community had already formulated its view in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights which laid down that 'everyone has a right to a nationality.' On this and on general grounds of moral propriety, the Council would have the right to ask all civilized governments to use their sovereign powers in order to discharge a sovereign obligation, and thus lift a burden of avoidable suffering, without waiting for the completion of discussions which many victims of statelessness might not survive."

Dr. Walter Kotschnig, the United States representative, said that the Committee had heard a statement of unusual interest and importance which deserved very careful consideration by the Council. He regarded it as so important that all members should study it: he thought it would be helpful if Dr. Perlzweig would submit a written statement which could be circulated to the governments. He proposed at once that the limitation on the length of the statement prescribed by the regulations should on this occasion be lifted so that the case could be stated in detail. He said that Dr. Perlzweig had stated his case with his usual and convincing eloquence, and while he could not at this stage commit his government, he was confident that if the written submission was formulated as well as the case had been orally stated, it would receive the most sympathetic consideration.

Dr. Kotschnig drew attention to the fact that the Economic and Social Council had already adopted a resolution on the subject of statelessness along the lines that Dr. Perlzweig had suggested, and he was anxious that on this too they should receive a written paper stating in full detail what action was proposed. In the meantime, he warmly supported the appeal which had been made for action by different countries.

R. Corley-Smith, the representative of Great Britain, also expressed his sympathy for the appeal on the subject of statelessness and pointed out that in this matter the views of Dr. Katschnig and Dr. Perlzweig were identical. Dr. Perlzweig had stated his case with his usual discretion, and he might well have said that the previous appeal of the Economic and Social Council had been received by some governments with discouraging complacency. For his own part, he thought that this was an occasion on which the non-governmental organizations could "whip up a little sentiment" in order to get some governments to move.

In his reply to the discussion, Dr. Perlzweig fully acknowledged the effort which the Economic and Social Council had made on the previous occasion but pleaded that it should be repeated with more emphasis on the obligation created by adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. He understood the difficulty which confronted some governments which had inherited an ancient tradition of reluctance to naturalize alien residents, even if they had lived in the country for a generation.

What was needed even more than new legislation, was a fundamental change of attitude. In some countries almost impossible tests of assimilability had been adopted, and a man was considered ineligible for citizenship if he retained some faint foreign intonation in his speech. To maintain these attitudes and habits of mind would be to nullify the clear intention of the Declaration, and he thought that there would be no real difficulty in securing a change if the United Nations by its decision helped to strengthen the desires of the progressive elements in the countries themselves.

He assured Mr. Corley-Smith that non-governmental agencies in this field would not be discouraged because they were conscious of fighting for a great and humane cause. And he hoped that the appeal which he had himself felt it his duty to make, would itself as a by-product help to "whip up some sentiment". The chairman of the meeting, M. de Seynes, representative of France, asked Dr. Perlzweig at the conclusion of the discussion whether he would be ready to submit written proposals for circulation, which he undertook to do.

Major Wins U.S. Silver Star

For his "fearless and calm leadership under enemy fire" in Korea, Major Joseph I. Gurfein, of 325 Ocean Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., has been awarded the U. S. Silver Star Medal. The National Jewish Welfare Board says that Major Gurfein, a graduate of West Point and a member of Congregation Shaara Torah of Brooklyn, is a veteran of World War II, with 32 months of combat service in the North African and European theatres. A parachute-engineers corps liaison officer, he performed his acts of combat gallantry in a "heavy snow storm, with the temperature at 10 to 15 degrees, and a 15-miles-an hour wind," according to the citation accompanying the award.

His battalion's mission was to effect a breakthrough of enemy lines from just north of Koto-ri.

Soon after the attack began, the citation recounts, a booby trap, exploding in front of the leading elements, wounded several men and "caused much excitement and confusion." The rear elements of the leading company, including vehicles, thereupon turned around on the narrow mountain road and started hastening to the rear, threatening to overrun the battalion command group. "Major Gurfein," the citation says, "stopped the movement to the rear, reorganized the elements, and started them moving forward again."

Several hours later, in the middle of the night, the enemy attacked in close. The battalion rear became disorganized under the assault, but Major Gurfein, "without hesitation and with complete disregard for his personal safety," again moved about among the men, reorganized them, and moved the column back into line. Major Gurfein's actions "so inspired the men that complete order was restored and the attack continued."

Several weeks before, Major Gurfein figured in cable dispatches to the U.S. when he reported the release of 29 wounded American soldiers of the 7th Division near the U.S. lines south of the Changjin reservoir. Major Gurfein has a brother, Arthur M., who saw combat in the Pacific as a 1st Lieutenant in the Marine Corps. Major Gurfein was graduated from West Point in June, 1941, and has been in service since then continuously. He has two children, aged seven and three.

Great Artists To Choose Students In Music Project

A series of Sunday afternoon violin and piano recitals, called "Musical Talent in Our Schools" and featuring students from schools in the New York area, will be broadcast over WQXR, radio station of The New York Times, starting in April.

Three of the world's most distinguished concert artists—Jascha Heifetz, Vladimir Horowitz and Rudolf Serkin—will serve on a five-man panel to choose the young persons who will appear in the broadcasts. Olin Downes, music critic of The Times, and Abram Chasins, music director of WQXR, will round out the panel.

The Times and WQXR will sponsor the project as part of their continuing educational program. The project was initiated by Mrs. Arthur Hays Sulzberger, director of special activities of The Times, and wife of the publisher, who envisions it as an annual activity.

The primary purposes of the project, Mr. Chasins emphasized, are to provide opportunities for youngsters whose musical development is a normal part of their general education, to encourage broader participation in music making, and to familiarize the public at large with the musical achievements in the public, parochial and private schools.

The stress, Mr. Chasins said, is on "the importance of making music for the joy of it."

"Our nation can only be considered truly musical if we make music ourselves; if music in the home and in the school is a natural part of daily living," he continued, "it is our hope that this project will stimulate the standards and frequency of music making generally. It is possible, in addition that we may find some talents qualified for professional careers."

Early plans were worked out in cooperation with the New York City Board of Education, the school systems of the New York Roman Catholic Archdiocese and the Brooklyn Diocese, the Music Education League and private school leaders. Preliminary auditions have been held in the public schools under the supervision of George H. Gartlan, director of music. WQXR has held a series of similar auditions.

Mr. Chasins pointed out that these auditions would not have the atmosphere of a contest.

"There are no winners or losers," he said. "No child will eliminate any other. The function of the judges is to determine how many of the youngsters heard, in their opinion, are sufficiently well prepared to be heard on the broadcasts. The more there are, the happier we will be."

ORTHODOX GROUP STARTS OWN DRIVE

The Agudath Israel of America, Orthodox Jewish movement, announced that it would start a fund-raising campaign for $1,000,000 to support its religious activities in Israel. The drive is a result of a refusal by the Jewish Agency for Palestine to renew its allocation to the Orthodox group for this year.

The religious organization quoted a letter from Dr. Nahum Goldmann, chairman of the American Section of the Jewish Agency, in which he said that the Agency had been compelled "to cut our budgets very radically" because of financial difficulties. Agency officials also said that all money derived from the United Jewish Appeal campaign was being used for the rehabilitation and resettlement program of the record influx of immigrants into Israel.

Commentaries

By Dr. Henry J. Stern, Rabbi

"And let them make me a sanctuary that I may dwell among them". — Exodus 25:8.

While our forefathers were set on their way toward the promised land, there came to them the divine behest to build the tabernacle. The tabernacle was a portable synagogue. What was the purpose of the tabernacle? Surely God is everywhere, and He needs no special abode. The greatest of Jewish commentators interpret the tabernacle as a symbol. Through it the people of Israel are to learn to live in accordance with the law of holiness, and realize spirituality. Hence, when the people will discipline themselves God will, indeed, "dwell among them" as is so explicitly stated in the biblical injunction.

Faithful to this command, Jews have thus become Temple builders. In Palestine, they erected the Temple at Shilo. In the tenth century B.C.E. came into being the magnificent Temple of Solomon with its magnificent ritual. When in 586 B.C.E. this Temple was destroyed, there arose in Babylon the greatest institution of Judaism, the synagogue, in which laymen and not priests came to play a most important role. And when the second Temple was demolished by the Romans, and Palestine lay in ruins, the synagogue became the fortress of Jewish life.

Wherever Jews marched throughout the globe in all their wanderings, there marched with them the synagogue. And during the 1900 years of Galut, it has been the synagogue that made for Israel's survival. Thus, the synagogue is the central institution of Jewish life. All other Jewish organizations have meaning as long as the sanctuary is a living institution disciplining the Jew to live the Jewish way of life.

A talmudic sage long ago declared: "He who lives in a community where there is a synagogue and does not frequent it, is a bad neighbour." By that, of course, is meant to convey that each and every Jew must practice communal responsibility. In Judaism, the community and its needs are paramount. When an individual seeks to live selfishly, he stands condemned. Most of the Jewish prayers are of a communal expression. Hear "us", forgive "us", the first person plural is repeated again and again, ever indicating the importance of neighbourliness and communal responsibility.

The modern synagogue is aiming to continue in the synagogue tradition of the centuries. Today the living Temple is not only a house of prayer, but also a great force for Jewish culture or Torah, and a communal institution. It is a pity that, due to process of secularization from which all of life suffers today, Jewish laymen, in too large numbers, have come to neglect the sanctuary. They will give their energies to all sorts of secular movements, and neglect the source spring of Jewish living. Without the synagogue and all it represents, Jews are but Semites and their place among the people of the earth has no great and significant purpose. The synagogue is the very symbol which eloquently says to Jew and non-Jew that Israel is the witness of God and the bearer of that mission dramatized in the story of Sinai. If Jews but return to their sanctuary, and live the religious life, they are indeed invincible.

The good Jew seldom indulges in talking about anti-Semitism. He fears not, because he walks in the way of holiness which gives him dignity and above all, a sense of self-reverence and respect. It is for the most part the de-Judaized Jew who is ever seeking to be an amateur Gentile, who is always jittery as to his status, and transmits thus an inferiority complex to his children. The greatest threat to modern Jewish life is not the anti-Semite, but the indifferent Jew who lives not the Jewish religious heritage. He, indeed, is a menace to himself and the community where he dwells. The call of the hour is for Jews to return to religion as symbolized by the synagogue in all its historic grandeur and beauty.

Next to the synagogue, another abode of the Jewish spirit has ever been the Jewish home. What a classic sanctuary the Jewish home has constituted! Here affection and reverence reigned supreme. Here parents have been priests and children acolytes, ministering at the home altar. Who, having memories of classic Jewish homes, will ever want to forget the beauty of the Sabbath and the glory of the festival observance? Through these dramatic festival observances the Jewish family life has always been sanctified. And no matter what hurts were inflicted upon the Jew in the world without, in his home the Jew was king. No wonder that the bonds of love between Jewish parents and children proved so strong.

Home is the laboratory where ideals taught by synagogue and church are put into practice. But the family institution and home itself are threatened in the present crisis. Perhaps, living as we do in a world of such tremendous changes, the home and family are also changing. That there is so much divorce in modern society may be also due to the fact that marriages are on the increase. However, whatever explaining we may attempt, for multitudes home is just a dwelling place.

If the home sanctuary is to be restored family prayer at family altars will have to be re-instituted. Observances of religious festivals will have to be restored. A religious home need not be unattractive. Parents need not display long faces as proof of spirituality. True, spirituality consists of solemn joy. Many a drift from religion has been due to home life, where children felt religious experiences to be unattractive and perfunctory in observances. Blessed is that home, where parents are enlightened and follow ritual in terms of the poetic.

Blind observances have often driven youth out of the home, and out of the faith. Liberal Judaism, reverencing the old Jewish rituals, has added in our day new ceremonies, as well as reinterpreted the old in order to strengthen home and synagogue life. We must return to synagogue and home, these two sanctuaries, so that we may come to know the holiness of life, its beauty and joy. For through the training of these institutions, we rise above animal existence, and come to realize the divinity that dwells within us.

Portrait Of Baruch's Father Spells Hope Of Medical Help

The New York University-Bellevue Medical Center Institute of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation was dedicated in a ceremony in the new plant at 400 East Thirty-fourth Street, New York, with Winthrop Rockefeller, chairman of the center's board of trustees, officiating.

A patient, Margaret Ann Fick, nine, started the ceremony by cutting a ribbon stretched across the entrance hall of the $2,055,000 building. Guests then went to the third-floor auditorium, where they heard speeches of dedication and saw the unveiling of a portrait which Bernard M. Baruch had presented to the institute.

Mrs. H. Robert Samstag, Mr. Baruch's daughter, unveiled the portrait of Mr. Baruch's father, Dr. Simon Baruch, a physical medicine pioneer, who died in 1921. The portrait was painted by the late J. Campbell Phillips in 1908.

Mr. Baruch spoke briefly. "In this building of hope," he said, "we have . . . a place where we do not see the sign 'Ye who enter here leave all hope behind'." Mr. Baruch, pointing at the portrait of his father, said he was "proud to have this picture look down and give hope." His brother, Dr. Herman Baruch, also attended the ceremony.

The four-story institute building is of functional modern architecture with accommodations for 100 in-patients and 150 out-patients. Its design will set the style for all other buildings planned as a part of the medical center's $32,000,000 development program.

Mayor Vincent R. Impellitteri was the first speaker. "This new institute is again dramatic proof of the fact that New York City has become the medical capital of the world," he said. "This new building is a significant advancement in the field of medical service and in the rehabilitation of the disabled. Here the medical castoffs of the past — paraplegics, spastics, arthritics, paralytics and the cerebral palsied — will benefit from the most modern therapy in this highly specialized field . . ."

Sam Leidesdorf, chairman of the center trustees building committee, and Mrs. Bernard F. Gimbel, a co-chairman of the institute fund-raising committee, spoke.

Noted Philosopher Was Convert To Catholicism

Dr. Hermann Borchardt, philosopher and author, died of a heart attack in New York at his home, 110 Morningside Drive. He was 62 years old. A refugee from Soviet Russia and Nazi Germany, Dr. Borchardt was best known for his writings against fascism and communism. His major book, "The Conspiracy of Carpenters", published in New York in 1943, proposed a stern theocracy as an alternative to present-day totalitarian systems.

Born in Berlin, Dr. Borchardt studied at the universities of Berlin, Greifswald and Rostock. While attending the latter, he became a disciple of the German philosopher, Otto Rehmke. After serving in the German army medical corps during World War I, Dr. Borchardt began a thirteen-year teaching career in Berlin universities.

He already had written an anti-fascist play when Hitler assumed power. In 1933 Dr. Borchardt went into exile in France, and while there accepted a professorship at the University of Minsk in Russia. Two years later after refusing to take out Soviet citizenship papers he was forced to leave and returned to Berlin in 1936.

Arrested by the Gestapo there he spent nearly a year in the concentration camps at Oranienburg, Sachsenhausen and Dachau. Dr. Borchardt lost his hearing, a finger and twelve teeth while a prisoner of the Gestapo. He fled to America immediately after his release in 1937.

Under the encouragement of Franz Werfel, the novelist, he wrote "The Conspiracy of Carpenters", first as an epic drama, but recast it in the form of a novel. Dr. Borchardt served as an adviser to Clare Booth Luce while she was a member of Congress. At his death, he was at work on another long work entitled "Treatise on Immortality." Dr. Borchardt was the author of many pamphlets and articles on Russia and fascism, as well as several philosophical books published in Germany.

Born to Jewish parents, he was converted three years ago to the Roman Catholic faith. He is survived by his widow, the former Dorothea Redmer; two sons, John and Franklin, and a daughter, Mrs. Suzanne Barclay.

lent acquiescence, is needed for this. Within the limits of her "non-identification" foreign policy, Israel does not want to do or say anything that could antagonize the Russians, according to the New York Times.

For this reason she has remained silent in the face of an unceasing barrage of anti-Israeli propaganda in Communist newspapers and over Communist radios since Moscow's brief honeymoon with the new state ended late in 1948.

SEES SECURITY

any foreign policy that seeks "to win friends among the peoples of Asia, the Near East and Africa must include programs geared to improving their health, food supply and education."

Representative Jacob K. Javits of New York urged repeal of the Internal Security Act "in the interests of our freedom at home and in the interests of that world leadership for freedom which we now carry by virtue of our resources, geographical position and moral strength."

NEW PROJECTS

creased to such an extent that it was very hard for Israel to compete on the world market.

Thousands of new immigrants are still a tremendous burden for the already drained economy of the young nation. Mr. Kaplan is of the opinion that these temporary problems can be solved only through large loans. According to a report issued by the Ministry of Finance, Israel's economy has made tremendous progress in spite of the aforementioned difficulties and hardships.

Agricultural output in 1950 increased 40 per cent, compared with 1949, but it is still insufficient to cover the demand of the urban population. The industrial expansion also shows progress, as compared with pre-war years. Mr. Kaplan and his advisers are at present mostly concerned with two problems: increase of production and the fight against threatening inflation.
